“ Whenever I visited Uncle Joe and Aunt Betty growing up, there was always a house brimming with activity and life. Pets (both domestic and otherwise) would follow whichever child brought it home that week, another would be practicing the piano and Aunt Betty would be frantically trying to keep the peace. Uncle Joe was always the calm, level headed one to me. Almost like he was in slow motion while the busy family carried on. On a visit in the winter, I remember waking up early one morning to see Uncle Joe running laps near their frozen pond. When I think of Uncle Joe, I think of that man who got up before dawn on that freezing morning to get in a quick run before returning to raise his beautiful family.
