“ Those of us who knew him, who loved him, who got to watch him grow from boy to man, from husband to father, we’ll miss the boy, and the man he turned out to be. We’ll miss the hard-working young man who met and married the love of his life, the gentle father, who cradled his babies against his hard chest while they slept,

We’ll miss the friend, who was always quick with a funny line, who was always eager to go off on another adventure, who fought with us and loved us with equal passion.

We’ll miss the brother, the son, the boy who tested his limits, who brought home the strangest and worst projects to work on, who befriended and defended those in need.

We’ll mourn the man who’s gone, whom we lost so tragically, but we’ll remember him, and remember that above all, he would want us to remember him as he lived, hardworking, hard playing and unconditionally loving. On the fearless edge of what was possible.

Forever in our hearts
