“ Next time you see a cardinal....

Nancy shared a poignant moment with me. She told me about the visit of a cardinal, a moment that seemed to stand still in time. As the bird appeared, she felt a sense of clarity—an understanding that her time with her mom was drawing to a close. That cardinal wasn't just a bird; it was a messenger, a sign, a reminder.

I reflected on the profound significance of that moment. From a place of mental readiness, preparing to say goodbye, to the more spiritual understanding that the heavens might be reaching out in some way, the experience was both deeply personal and universally meaningful. The cardinal as a symbol of hope. It's a gentle nudge to remind us that even in the darkest moments, we possess an inner strength to keep moving forward.

For many, spotting a cardinal is a deeply spiritual experience... a sign that someone we've loved is trying to reach us. Sharing this because I feel the cardinal is hope and when you see one, a glimpse of peace and a promise that love, even in its most difficult forms, is eternal.

“ Nancy shared a deeply poignant moment with me, one that is on replay, so I'll share because I feel it means something. She told me about the visit of a cardinal, a moment that seemed to stand still in time. As the bird appeared, she felt a sense of clarity—an understanding that her time with her mom was drawing to a close. That cardinal wasn't just a bird; it was a messenger, a sign, a reminder.

I've been reflecting on the profound significance of that moment. From a place of mental readiness, preparing to say goodbye, to the more spiritual understanding that the heavens might be reaching out in some way... that the experience was both deeply personal and 'universally' meaningful. The cardinal, with its vibrant red feathers, is more than just a beautiful creature; it's a symbol of hope. It's a gentle nudge to remind us that even in the darkest moments, we possess an inner strength to keep moving forward. The pain we feel doesn't last forever, and like the cardinal's fleeting presence, tough times eventually give way to something brighter.

Many feel spotting a cardinal is a spiritual experience. It's believed to be a sign that someone we've loved is trying to reach us. In that moment, it offers comfort, guidance, and a message that everything will be okay. As Nancy shared this moment with me, it felt as though the cardinal was not only offering her a glimpse of peace but a promise that love, even in its most difficult forms, is eternal. -Donna
